Authenticity flew in from the east during a recent chemical agent exercise, when a University of Utah Health Care AirMed helicopter entered Dugway's restricted airspace to participate in a chemical contamination exercise. The Chemical Accident or Incident Response and Assistance (CAIRA) was coordinated by Dugway's West Desert Test Center for auditors and observers from the Department of the Army Inspector General's office.

An AirMed helicopter was used because Dugway has no permanently assigned aircraft. "This marks the first time that an outside agency was involved in a CAIRA arranged by the mission [testing] side," said Scott Wendt, a safety officer for Dugway. "AirMed got to see a lot of our facilities, as well as take a tour of some of the other areas; see some potential landing spots, all in preparation so that if we do have an incident we can take care of Dugway's personnel

Work-Life Balance

I am amazed every day by the dedication and commitment of our installation team. Despite challenges due to limited resources and the weather, everyone continues to perform exceptionally well. One challenge we face, due to our desire to excel, is the potential risk of increased stress levels and burnout. It is imperative that leaders and team members find ways to maintain an effective work-life balance. I would encourage everyone to meet with their team members, and also to think individually, about what helps us recharge our batteries on a daily, weekly, and annual basis to maintain fulfilling, healthy, and balanced lives. I recommend that leaders meet with their team to discuss leave schedules for the year and plan out a strategy that allows everyone to take leave when needed. Leave should be of adequate length to allow employees time to fully decompress, rebuild resiliency and then come back to work ready to tackle the mission at hand. I know this can be incredibly challenging with current resources and mission requirements, however, sporadic days off do not allow adequate time to reset and sustain resiliency across the various dimensions of strength, as outlined in AR 350-53, Comprehensive Soldier and Family Fitness (CSF2). The goal of CSF2 is to increase resilience and performance enhancement skills by building on five dimensions of strength: physical, emotional, social, spiritual, and family. In the physical dimension, we perform and excel in physical activities that require aerobic fitness, endurance, strength, healthy body composition and flexibility derived through exercise, nutrition and training. This dimension also includes the Office of the Surgeon General Performance Triad initiative of sleep, activity, and nutrition to improve personal and unit performance, resilience, and readiness. In the emotional dimension, we approach life's challenges in a positive, optimistic way by demonstrating self-control, stamina, and good character with our choices and actions. The challenges our workforce and families regularly face can potentially erode our emotional control. Because emotions drive how we approach challenges and problem solving, emotional control is critical to the development and sustainment of resilience and aid station to monitor his health and prepare him for air transport. The next stop was nearby Michael Army Airfield, where the patient was loaded into an AirMed Bell 407 helicopter and flown 10 miles to Dugway's English Village signifying the end of the exercise.

In the event of an actual contamination accident, the patient would be flown approximately 85 air miles to the University of Utah Health Care in Salt Lake City.

Wendt expects that AirMed will participate in more Dugway exercises, which are typically conducted quarterly. "This CAIRA was very successful," Wendt said. "There were things that we learned, and things we could add and do differently. We want to challenge ourselves to continue to get better, not just for us but for the Warfighter and the employees."

psychological health.

The social dimension is about developing and maintaining trusted, valued relationships and friendships that are personally fulfilling and foster good communication, including a comfortable exchange of ideas, views, and experiences. Adherence to the Army Values and other beliefs embodied in the Army profession and ethics help form and strengthen bonds of trust and esprit de corps that promote relationships and enhance resilience. These relationships are important because they serve as a support network for those who experience setbacks in life.

The spiritual dimension is about identifying our purpose, core values, beliefs, identity, and life vision. These elements, which define the essence of a person, enable us to build inner strength, make meaning of experiences, behave ethically, persevere through challenges, and be resilient when faced with adversity. Our spirituality draws upon personal, philosophical, psychological, and/or religious teachings or beliefs, and forms the basis of character.

The family dimension defines a nurturing family unit as one that is safe, supportive, loving, and provides the resources needed for all members to live in a healthy and secure environment. Regardless of how we define family, it is often our primary source of support. A dysfunctional family dynamic can result in personal distraction and degraded performance.

I encourage everyone to spend some time looking at the CSF2 website (<http://csf2.army.mil/>) and consider taking the Global Assessment Tool, a survey tool to confidentially assess an individual's health based on the five dimensions of strength. Other online resources include the performance triad website (<http://armymedicine.mil/Pages/performance-triad.aspx>) and the Army's Ready and Resilient webpage (<https://www.army.mil/readyandresilient/>).

Thank you all for what you do each and every day to support this installation and our community. Dugway is truly a national treasure because of our amazing professionals and our families who comprise Team Dugway. I hope all of you have a wonderful summer and have the opportunity to decompress and recharge with friends and family as time allows.

DUGWAY STORIES

COMPILED BY ROBERT RAMPTON

Huge Mural for CBRWOC Painted by SFC Padelford

A 17 foot by seven foot mural depicting the development of Dugway Proving Ground from early times was recently completed by SFC Ward W. Padelford of the CBR Weapons Orientation Course.

The huge color mural will be used in the orientation of students attending the CBR course.

THE IDEA was conceived by Lieutenant Colonel Charles W. Anderson, school commandant and technical assistance were given by Tony Azzelio, CBR school illustrator.

It took Sgt. Padelford approximately two and one-half months to complete the job.

The talented sergeant is a commercial artist and a graduate of the Polytechnic School of art in California.

HE IS an 18-year veteran in the Army and drew cartoons for Stars and Stripes newspaper in Germany – while serving with the 9th Infantry Division in 1954 and 1955. He has also painted large murals at Ft. Carson and Ft. Lewis.

He and his wife, Gertrude, live at 173 B East 5th on post. They have one son Philip who just entered the Navy.

SFC Ward Padelford puts the last daubs of paint on the mural which will hang in the CBRWOC auditorium.

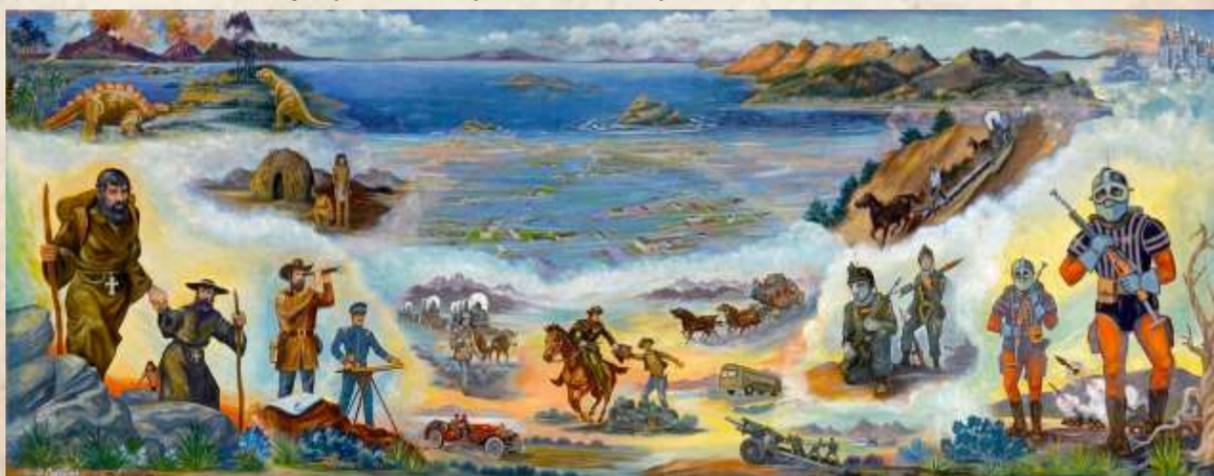

The famous 1966 mural, was the brainchild of Lt. Col. Charles W. Anderson, the CBRWOC commandant. Conceived as a teaching visual, much thought went into its creation. It would introduce students to the unique history of the area and to Dugway Proving Ground and its important CBR mission. The images chosen for the mural, including the unconventional soldiers of the distant future, were all based on Colonel Anderson's ideas, and subject to his review and final approval.

The mural itself, was painted in oils on canvas. Before any paint was applied, a 17 foot length of unbleached artists canvas was adhered to a specially built concave, plywood base and metal frame, then sized with gesso, a surface primer made from chalk and white pigment. Once dry, and lightly sanded, a faint grid was drawn with pencil on the entire surface.

The final composition elements, drawn in smaller scale and revised many times by Tony Azzelio, could be scaled up to the finished size and position. Once redrawn onto the mural with charcoal pencil, the sketches were fixed with a sienna and turpentine wash. Most of the actual painting was executed by Sergeant Padelford. A step-ladder was employed to reach the upper portions of the mural.

As to where the mural was actually painted, photos hint at a long section of upper wall in the Officers Open Mess, now the Dugway Community Club, a Ward W. (William) Padelford, also known as "Bud", was a native of Washington state, born in Seattle in 1909. Always doodling and sketching from an early age, he parlayed his talent into a commercial art degree from Cal-Poly and a career as a artist and sign painter back in his home town.

Pearl Harbor changed all that. Padelford enlisted in the Army, beginning an adventure that spanned almost 40 years in the service, and took him, and sometimes his family, to Japan, Korea, Germany, Vietnam and, of course, Dugway Proving Ground.

Accompanied by his wife, he arrived at Dugway in 1965, assigned to the CBRWOC transportation detachment. His artistic talents quickly became known as he painted landscapes and wild horses in the desert around Dugway. While he was stationed here, he entered paintings annually in the Tooele county and Utah state fairs.

SFC Padelford completed the mural in April of 1966, to great acclaim. He left his Dugway assignment a year later and was stationed at Ft. Lewis before his last deployment to Vietnam, with the Studies and Observations Group, a classified reconnaissance and rescue operations unit. He received the Joint Service Commendation Medal for his service in 1969.

He retired from the Army, remarried and settled down in Snohomish, WA in the late 70's. He taught himself to play numerous musical instruments, but excelled at his favorite - the harmonica. He took great pride in his military service. Ward Padelford passed away from natural causes at his home in 2002 at the age of 93.

Attilio A. (Arthur) Azzelio, known as "Tony", was born in the little Italian enclave of Highland Boy, high in a side canyon above Utah's Bingham Canyon copper mine in 1920. Life was tough, but the Azzelio's fared better than most.

Upon graduating from high-school, Tony moved to Los Angeles and enrolled at Woodbury College, graduating in 1941 with a degree in "business" art.

As with many, war changed everything, and Tony Azzelio enlisted, at age 22, in the Army. He completed his 39 month service stationed at Ft. Flagler, WA with a coastal battery, protecting the Seattle Navy yard. He was honorably discharged in 1946.

Upon discharge, he enrolled at the University of Utah and by 1950 had earned his Master of Fine Arts degree. At faculty urging, he applied for and received a Fulbright Scholarship and left, in 1952 for Italy to study advanced painting and sculpting techniques at the University of Florence. He returned three years later with another degree, a wife and a newborn son.

Sometime in 1958, Tony Azzelio moved to Dugway and began work as the staff illustrator for the CBRWOC, preparing materials and artwork for the new course. In his off time, he taught evening art classes to any resident at the Officer's Club. He also was well known as a member of the Dugway chapter of Toastmasters International.

After the closure of the CBRWOC in 1969, Tony Azzelio disappears from the Dugway record. Few public records of any kind have turned up. It appears he retired in the 80's and may still be living in Salinas, CA.

location where the community could watch Sergeant Padelford work on the mural and see its progress.

On completion, the mural and its framework were moved to the CBRWOC auditorium where it was hoisted, with ropes and pulleys, into position above the seats on the back wall, where it remains today, 51 years later.
